

---

← Pre-Course Work

1 / 28

A Familiar (and Horrifying) Scenario

It's 1:30 a.m. You're finally writing that novel you swore you'd get around to. You've just overhauled the finale — your pièce de résistance. Yeah, that's how good your book is - you're throwing around French phrases casually.

But, as you close your laptop, a sinking feeling hits you right in the gut: What if your ending is terrible?

Your idea from the night before may very well have been better. Only now that ending is gone, along with your future Nobel Prize...

