Branching and Pull Requests in Action

Want an example of the kind of work that involves branching and pull requests? You're looking at one! Yup, these lessons were created via GitHub. The GA team started with a master branch, and several subject matter experts were each assigned a single unit.

These experts created branches off the master and built out their assigned units within them. Once they completed the material for a given unit, they submitted a pull request to the repository's administrator, who reviewed their work and either pulled the branch into the master or requested additional changes.
